A recent study by the American Cancer Society (ACS) revealed that the risk of dying from cancer in the United States has decreased over the past 28 years according to annual statistics. The cancer death rate from the most recent data available in 1991 to 2019 has fallen 32% from its peak. The aforementioned drop seems to link to an increase in the percentage of people who are being diagnosed at an early stage of the disease. Other factors that contributed to the reduced death rate include chemotherapy, combination treatments, and prevention and/or early detection through screening.
